ENhance Case Study

Authentic assessment: Level II Quality Control & Pharmaceutical Analysis
Amy Green (School of Applied Sciences)

Context
There are weekly laboratory practicals where students individually practice the processes necessary for pharmaceutical analysis. These build toward a 4-hour practical lab assessment where students are given a problem to solve using these skills. Their final assessment is an influence on the content of the module. The module employs continuous feedback and development which can help them going forward.

Authentic assessment:
Through the practical sessions, students maintain laboratory notebooks aligned with the industry Good Laboratory Practice. A scenario where the complete assessment preparation feedback is used by the team that did not depend on the individuality of the students to support development ahead of assessment. Students carrying their lab notes into the practical assessment to use as guides, as the result of a process of writing, both assessment types, practical and oral, are representative of experience. This includes that the students will undertake in the working world. Significantly, these assessments cannot be plagiarised. Importantly, students whose academic scientific writing is weaker can equally demonstrate their skills which carry over to industry.

Students can be nervous ahead of these assessments given their novelty but are pleased for remaining calm under pressure and completing the task at hand is not a small feat. The students feel a sense of accomplishment upon completion of these assessments.

Additional feedback provided by the students after the assessments highlights areas for future improvement. This does not have an impact on their resultant grades but creates space for students to give an independent practical review.
